DON'T BE BALD

Here's a Good Way to Stop Loss of Hair and Start New Hair Growth

Hair can never be made to grow again after the hair roots themselves are dead. But few of us, fortunately, grow bald in a day, and we have ample warning that our hair is steadily growing thinner. Parisian Sage is probably as effective a hair restorer as could possibly be found, but to prevent further loss of hair, and to actually start a new hair growth on the bald and thin spots, it must be rubbed right into the scalp with finger tips, or a medium sized brush, so that the hair roots can really absorb it. Try to get as much on the scalp, and as little on the hair, as possible. Your hair doesn't need it but your scalp does, and a few weeks scalp massage with Parisian Sage (just a few minutes daily) will usually check any further loss of hair and make the hair grow as thickly and luxuriantly as ever.

Unlike many hair tonics, Parisian Sage contains no sulphur or poisonous wood alcohol, and will not make the hair gray or stain the hair or scalp. It can be obtained from the Red Cross Pharmacy or drug stores everywhere, and is not at all expensive.

Wednesday at their home in Vergennes, Mr. Parker attended Norwich university and graduated from Dartmouth college. He served in the Civil war. He was for several years engaged in the manufacture of doors, blinds, etc., and one of the promoters of the Vergennes Electric Co., being president until he retired from active business about a year ago. He has held the office in Vergennes of mayor, superintendent of schools and representative of the board of trustees of the Bixby Free Memorial library, a trustee of the Prospect Cemetery association, a member of the Vermont State Militia, Order of the Loyal Legion of the United States and the Society of the 19th Army Corps, a life member of the Episcopal church and a trustee of the Vermont Episcopal institute.

His sister, Mrs. Julia C. E. Dorr, Vermont's noted poetess and author, was educated at the Troy Conference academy and the Ripley female college of Poughkeepsie, is prominent in the work of the Episcopal church and of the Vergennes Improvement society.

Canada's Nickel Output.

Canada's minister of land, forests and mines announces that both the International Nickel company and the British-American Nickel company are soon to begin creation of refineries in the province of Ontario, the latter company making the refinery an essential part of its plant near Sudbury and the former company, it is reported, having decided on a site with access to Lake Erie. Pressure from the Dominion government for action of this kind has been constant for some time, and has proved irresistible. Notwithstanding confidence has been implicit that the Dominion government and the British government were seeing to it that no Canadian ore or nickel made from Canadian ore was getting into Germany via shipments from New York, there has been official acquiescence in the popular demand, quite natural as conditions are, that the ore mined in Canada should be refined there. Nor has it been possible for the companies controlling the output to give any reason why the demand should not be met. That is, no reason that weighs much against the stern demand of the public that all mineral wealth so far as possible shall aid friends and not foes and shall be put in vendable form where output and shipment can be controlled.

A large percentage of the available nickel ore of the world is now found in the Sudbury region of Ontario. Ores that are rich but refractory have been manipulated by experts in the employ of capital that the deposits have come to have much value, pecuniary and strategic. If foresight had been equal to hindsight the Dominion would have from the first guarded her interests in this mineral wealth as she has since been forced to do by the war; and if she has learned the lesson well which the incident supplies, her state policy toward mining projects and mineral wealth hereafter will be considerably more conservative and conserving. Her central and western provinces have dared to be innovators in taxing of the land and securing of social values for social ends. As the vast mineral wealth of the Dominion is uncovered, it will be a pity if the wasteful, monopolistic and uncontrolled methods the United States has shown until a recent date in dealing with this form of property are not departed from. Adequate control and taxation of this sort of property during coming years would make the debts with which the Dominion will end the war a detail of comparative indifference.—Christian Science Monitor.

CADDIES OF THE LINKS.

Their Originals Were Messenger Boys In Old Edinburgh.

Originally the caddy of the present day golf links appears to have been quite another individual, engaged in another line of activity. Caddies in the remote past were messenger boys in old Edinburgh. Gathered around the famous Edinburgh cross, where all important messages were read and many public ceremonies were held—the cross which was the very center of the old city—the caddies in their ragged clothes waited to be employed.

The chief merchants of the city, the leading official persons, the men of learning and of talent, the nobles, the lairds, the clergymen—all clustered about the cross during certain hours of the day, and very often some one wished to send a parcel or message to another part of the town, or a stranger to Edinburgh wanted to be directed.

Here was where the caddies were appealed to. These boys might be trusted with any duty with which they were charged. They were veritable street directories. A visitor to the town would often engage a caddy to be wholly at his bidding, as the boy's knowledge of the place was invaluable.

But, unless this visitor were most cautious, he would suddenly discover that his caddy, in addition to his vast knowledge of Edinburgh, knew also all about his employer—where he came from, what was his business in Edinburgh, his family connections, his tastes and preferences.—Exchange.

LIVING AEROPLANES.

Wherein Birds Differ From Flying Machines Made by Man.

It would be a mistake to suppose that the bird's wings enable it to fly. If wings spelled flying any of us could attach a pair and soar into the air.

The hollow bones of the birds make light bodies, but they are attached to a rigid backbone, which forms the main feature of the bird's body. This gives the central firmness, and the muscles do the rest. The wings balance their owners, and the tail acts as a rudder for steering. Often enough the bird seems to use its tail as a sort of brake.

It is interesting to compare the bird with the product of man's skill—the aeroplane. To begin with, there is no aeroplane made which copies the up and down motion of the bird's wings, all our machines having fixed wings, or planes.

But naturally man tried to copy the living fliers around him. He made wings of feathers, etc., connected them with his shoulders and legs and found that his muscles could not raise him an inch.

The muscles, or motors, which now drive him through the air are as strong as 200 horses, so no wonder he failed at first. Even the bird, with a body so perfectly formed for flight, has flying muscles equal in weight to all its other muscles put together.—Pearson's Weekly.

On the Contrary.

"What a lot of mail you've got this morning!" exclaimed the poet's wife. "But then, of course, this is your birthday, and those are 'Many happy returns of the day' from all your friends."

"No," said the poet, pushing aside a heap of rejected manuscripts. "These are unhappy returns of the day from the publishers."—New York World.

Not Much.

"There should be a national holiday called junk day, when every house barn, shed, garage, etc., should be rid of all its junk."

Between Girls.

"She says she wishes she could see herself as others see her."

"That's just an excuse for spending a lot of time in front of a mirror."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

SENECA SNAKEROOT.

Indians Discovered the Value of the Plant as a Medicine.

The drug industry owes many of its products to the efforts of the American Indian to combat disease. The Indian medicine man had a plant for every ailment. If the disease was of a new type unknown to him he promptly found some new roots or leaves and tried them. If the patient lived he named the plant and carved it on the stone which served as his pharmacopoeia.

A certain medicine man, puzzled by the strange case of an Indian who wouldn't eat, went searching through the rocky woodlands of New England one day for some new "dope." He found a little plant bearing a spike of small white flowers. He pulled it up and tasted the root, made a wry face and said, "I guess that will fix him."

That's how Seneca snakeroot came to be used as a medicine, and the old Indian medicine man planned better than he knew. The plant is on the books of the skilled pharmacist of today, and men make money cultivating it. It is employed in tonics and other medicines prescribed to increase the appetite.—Philadelphia North American.

Was Good Once.

A certain well known composer now in the full vigor of his established reputation was at one time when he was comparatively unknown engaged in writing the music for a production factored by two managers who knew exactly what they wanted, in addition to knowing next to nothing of the musical classics. After having burned much midnight oil and worked himself into a state of semicollapse in a vain endeavor to produce a finale which would please them the composer tore up page after page of rejected manuscript and in despair took to the theater an entire section of "Faust" to which he had somehow managed to fit the words assigned to him. He played it over, and one of the managers said quite unfeelingly, "Well, Gus, the others were pretty bad, but this one is the rottenest of them all." "So?" remarked the weary musician dryly. "It was considered good when Gounod wrote it!"
